

POLITICAL SCIENCE MINOR

The Political Science minor invites students to learn about four subfields: political theory, international relations, comparative politics, and American politics. Students have the flexibility to explore their interests by taking a variety of classes across subfields or to dive deeper into one or two subfields that interest them. Students can also participate in our robust internship programs both in Chicago and in Washington, DC.

For more information, please contact Professor David Doherty (ddoherty@luc.edu), Undergraduate Program Director for the Department of Political Science.

Suggested Sequence of Courses

Students can begin the Political Science minor at any point in their undergraduate studies, in consultation with their advisor. While there is no set sequence of classes, students are encouraged to take introductory classes (PLSC 100, PLSC 101, PLSC 102, and PLSC 103) before taking upper division classes in those subfields. For example, although it is not required, students may benefit from taking PLSC 101 American Politics before taking an upper division class on Campaigns and Elections in the United States. Once students have declared their minor, they are encouraged to contact the Political Science Department's Undergraduate Program Director for further guidance on how best to progress with their studies.

Learning Outcomes

The Minor in Political Science is designed to achieve the following learning outcomes:

- Demonstrate an understanding of the structures and functions of political systems.
- Be able to apply political theories and concepts when interpreting past and current events.
- Recognize the influence of cultural, social, and historical contexts on political behavior, values, institutions, or policies.
- Characterize the roots of enduring social disagreements and conflicts.
- Evaluate normative or empirical claims about political phenomena.
- Demonstrate an ability to communicate effectively about complex political issues.
- Develop research skills to gather, evaluate, and synthesize information from multiple sources to support arguments or theories in political science.
